SAN ANTONIO (KTRK) -- A former member of the Pittsburgh Steelers who survived an acid attack is suing the strip club where he says he was attacked.Jerry Sandusky, a cornerback for the Steelers, was part of a team that went to strip clubs in San Antonio, including The Envy, for charity in late 2014. A group from New York had organized the event and invited players from other NFL teams.On Nov. 28, 2014, Sandusky went to the strip club with teammate Ryan Mundy. He left the club about 9 p.m. and walked to his vehicle. He was a passenger in the backseat.A man attacked Sandusky, Mundy and two others with acid and robbed them.The lawsuit states Sandusky was hospitalized for two months after the incident. It was reported he lost an eye and will now have life-long pain and disfigurement. The other two men also suffered injuries.The Envy's insurance company settled a claim. No records about the settlement were released.Sandusky also sued the strip club a couple of times and was paid a settlement for injuries in 2014 and 2015.Sandusky's lawsuit was filed on behalf of his wife, Rosalind Sandusky, and minor daughter. The lawsuit seeks more than $50,000 in damages.We reached out to the Envy's attorney. He said the place is new and they don't comment on pending litigation.Police say Sandusky was randomly targeted and there was nothing suspicious in the case.Q: What is this strange article in an Irish newspaper? Sometime between the eighth and the nineteenth centuries, no date is known, a man named Kenneth passed through the neighbourhood of Londonderry, in which was a forest of trees which were loaded with nuts and fruits. He found these animals so delightful and so plentiful that he was not able to live there without their society. For this reason, he became an
