Evidence now supports the notion that oligodendrocytes arise from neural stem cells that reside in the CNS during embryogenesis. In contrast, astrocytes appear to arise from local progenitors in the ventricular and subventricular zones of the postnatal CNS. It is, however, possible that both oligodendrocytes and astrocytes arise from local precursors in the young CNS. Here, I propose that neural stem cells give rise to oligodendrocytes in the embryonic CNS, that oligodendrocyte precursors leave the ventricular and subventricular zones during development and migrate along a distinct route to populate specific white matter tracts, and that the oligodendrocyte lineage is progressively lost after birth.
