FontLab.Angiogenesis is the development of new blood vessels. It occurs in development, wound healing and various pathological processes including diabetic retinopathy. In early retinopathy angiogenesis is a primary pathophysiological change and precedes retinal and vitreous hemorrhage, fibrous proliferation, and fluid accumulation (see Macleod et al. (2009) “Angiogenesis: pathophysiology, treatment, and prospects”, Nat Rev Eye 1:493-507). Vascular endothelial growth factor (VEGF) has been implicated in the development of retinopathy in various animal models of diabetes (see
