Congress' Five Most Dangerous Issues It's that time of year again when the federal government's spending spree comes to an end. It's time to flush all the dollars that your tax dollars were used to waste into the nearest ditch. It's time for your representatives to start thinking about how to best be of service, not party. But there's a little bit of "entertaining" to get you through this season of paying taxes on your summer vacation and federal match for your workplace retirement plan. Even though Republicans and Democrats alike like to pretend this time of year is just tedious at best, it really isn't for most people. But, for those die-hard fans like myself, here are a few of the more interesting issues we'll be discussing over the next few weeks. Most Americans are terrified of the current entitlement system: The government spends its money as if it can keep going indefinitely. While the Social Security and Medicare programs have been around for decades, it's only recently that the Boomers have started to get old enough to collect their social security checks and start drawing on their Medicare. But in the meantime, Uncle Sam keeps on spending more and more money, and social media is already pointing fingers at the bubble that is about to burst. But there are also several things that could be done to rein in spending. One of the most popular is to put inflation in place, in place of the current cost of living adjustments. Then again, if the government is concerned with putting in place policies that could encourage inflation, the government wouldn't be so quick to spend it's dollars like a drunken sailor. On the opposite end of the spectrum, there are those who would like to impose the solution of the Biblical 10-40-10 plan. It basically says that the government should collect 10% of GDP for 10 years, 40% of GDP for 40 years, and the remaining 50% of GDP should be available for anything the government wants to do. But really, it's much more than an economic theory, it's a plan to battle poverty. Imagine a world where a family of five cannot afford to eat, let alone a dozen eggs every day. Well, that's the world we're currently in. But no, that's not the only reason why we should rethink the plans. We are quickly approaching a day when the government can no longer provide basic human services to the population, and at that point, why shouldn't the government simply allow that portion
