* Capture NX Version 2.0 or later, formerly known as Photoshop File Converter, Capture NX is an excellent image viewer and is used as a plug-in application. It is available for free with access to the entire Adobe Photoshop CS6 toolbox on the Internet. This is a great application if you are a Photoshop user, but it does have its limitations. Capture NX doesn't support saving for the Web or web-based editing of images, but it is very useful when editing images for print or presentation. * * * Because of its use of layers, Photoshop works well for graphics and web design. It also works well as a file converter, but the software is not optimized for converting files for the Web. * * * ## Adobe Fireworks Recently, Adobe has made Fireworks CS6 available for free. Fireworks is similar to Photoshop, but it has limited use for the Web and a more simplistic user interface. ## Photoshop Elements Elements is a free graphics program, like Photoshop, that has a number of features to help you create graphics. Elements is packaged with all the latest versions of Photoshop, Photoshop CC, and Photoshop CS6, but is designed to be used with other applications. Elements is a great tool for creating graphics for the Web. Elements allows you to save for the Web, and in fact, you can even use it to upload graphics to a web server. Because the web server creates a web-ready file from the elements, you will not lose quality in the conversion process. Elements also has good online training resources to help you get started. ## CorelDRAW CorelDRAW has been an industry standard for a few years. It is used for many different purposes from newspaper design to creating graphics for marketing materials. The corelDRAW community is very strong and has a lot of tools to keep you up to date with the latest features. ## Other Graphics Tools There are many graphics programs, such as Adobe InDesign and Apple Pages, that can be used for converting graphics and creating flyers, brochures, and other similar documents. # Chapter 22 The Internet: Web Page Tools and Online Resources * * * # Online Computer Graphics Resources Online, you have access to many different resources. Not only can you find hundreds of free tutorials, but you also have access to more than a few tools, software, and resources

HIV positive children receive medical care at the Institute of Child Health and Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine While screening for sexually transmitted infections and HIV in Africa is crucial for public health, HIV testing has led to some worrying statistics. In Burkina Faso, for instance, antenatal HIV testing was found to be around 40% among pregnant women, while in Nigeria it was just 0.7%. In order to tackle HIV in newborns, the World Health Organization (WHO) and UNICEF, together with other experts have worked for years to get newborn hearing testing up to par. With more than one in three infants globally born with a disability, new developments are urgently needed. On Wednesday, December 15, the WHO and UNICEF held a ceremony marking the completion of a pilot study in five countries, in which all newborns receive a screen test. "The prevention of hearing loss is an easy, straightforward intervention that offers the greatest potential for the prevention of other neonatal and childhood illnesses and disabilities," says Dr. Olive Karwaho, WHO's Director for the Eastern Mediterranean Region. In Uganda, in the first nation in sub-Saharan Africa with a newborn hearing screening policy, 80% of newborns received screening, compared to only 52% in Kenya, and just 36% in Burkina Faso. As a results, the study found that 73% of newborns diagnosed with hearing loss were able to receive treatment, compared to just 41% in Burkina Faso. Sub Saharan Africa has a high rate of hearing loss Other countries that took part in the study, which also included newborns in three Latin American countries, were Argentina, Cameroon, Congo and South Africa. In some countries, nearly all newborns were screened – except Cameroon, and Guinea. The reasons given for not doing so included cost, lack of expertise and equipment. This is despite the fact that in none of these countries there is a cochlear implant programme for children, says Karwaho. "This is a major problem," she adds. "We know that 90% of people with hearing loss are unable to benefit from hearing aids, and that most of them require cochlear implants." The study found that the programme in Cameroon is expanding, and added that in South Africa the WHO is working with the government to develop a programme. Similar to adult screening programmes, this
