I don't fully understand why, but I always see IMUs like the one in the image linked below simply determining the attitude of the IMU/structure using quaternions with no additional sensors like optical gyroscopes, accelerometers, magnetometers, etc. My reasoning is that the gyroscopes are already sensing rotation, and if the IMU is rotating as well, then the attitude of the IMU should be determined by the combination of gyroscopes and accelerometers. My main question is: where do all the optical gyroscopes, accelerometers, magnetometers and pressure sensors come into play in these cases? A: I've listed a fairly complete list of INS and IMU sensors in an answer to a question here. According to this article (emphasis added): 3. Sensor Fusion. Many high-performance instruments make use of the International Reference System, or IRS, which establishes definitions for three reference coordinate systems: Earth-Centered Earth-Fixed (ECEF), Earth-Centered Earth-Aligned (ECEA), and the Earth-Centered Earth-Fixed Aligned (ECEF FA). So with their IREF-compliant sensors, you could get very accurate results from your "end-user" inertial measurement applications. Since this is basically the same technology on which GPS systems run, you can even avoid using the external GPS receiver. Q: Throwing exceptions from native c++ to Java I'm trying to use some library from Java. So I have a function in C++ code which I want to call from Java but it is not allowed to. So

I want to convert my function to throw exception to Java. I was able to throw exception and then catching it in Java code. But if I want to call a function in Java (which throws exception) from C++, it

Am i doing something wrong? I am following the exact same steps as the instructions on the forum. "Download the SolSuiteSolitaire.zip folder for the.dll and jusig.dll files into your SolSuite 2011 installation folder." I downloaded the zip file and put the files into the SolSuite 2011 folder. I took off the jusig.dll file from the SolSuite 2011 folder and put it into my normal application files folder. So I have the crack file and the jusig.dll and.a.dll files in my application files folder, so I am referring to the instructions exactly and I cannot find any bugs in these instructions except my following files. solsuite.ini solsuite.exe solsuite.exe.config solsuite.dll solsuite.dll.mui solsuite.ini solsuite.jpg solsuite.smdi solsuite.xml DllPatcher.rp A: You need.exe file. While in "Home" button, at the bottom you have some files. That's it.

The steps below are for portable use: 1- Extract the zip file. 2- Find the jusig.dll in the decompressed folder (not in the SOLSuite folder) 3- copy it to where it should be. 4- copy the solsuite.exe to where it should be. 5- You're done! 6- Maybe a new link is not needed (This may vary according to the patch). Just double click the solsuite.exe to run. Read this if you want: A: The most updated SolSuite Solitaire does not have a.dll for jusig.dll You can download the cracked version, which has jusig in it You will also need to download the jusig_engine.dll .
